

A global state of insanity

“We know that so much of what we see, what we do and what we choose to ignore, is unacceptable within the realms of the truth that lies deep within us all.

Yet the madness continues because humanity is in denial of their role in the insanity.”

Is humanity being sacrificed?

Pain is driving the processes of the Construct, which has been masterfully directed by the Problem Solving Mind within nearly every single living human being on this planet. The Insanity of Humanity is a by-product of this powerful combination and is often conveniently excused and disguised when the collective has created the necessary processes of justifications to deflect individual responsibility.

So let's have a look at what can happen when a planet is infected by billions of a highly intelligent species that are allowing their lives to be guided by pain. We will explore the ramifications of this global reality that we are all witnessing, to guide you on your journey of awareness - giving you the opportunity to enable yourself to function beyond the insanity that is consuming large portions of the human genus. Once we create some honesty as to our existing global reality, we can then look more closely and honestly at the nature of the Construct and the Problem Solving Mind.

So, what was nature thinking, creating all of this pain and suffering and channelling it through the processes of the Problem Solving Mind, which ultimately brings all of this suffering into our lives?

It brings not only suffering into our lives but also massive levels of stupidity, relative to the human mind's potential. Particularly when you consider that we spend more time using our intelligence to look for something to blame for our pain, rather than understanding the processes that are causing it.

Maybe there is method in this madness that we as a collective species just can't see yet. And on the whole, we can't, because the current pathway we are on keeps us in a state of blindness, as it powerfully serves something far greater than you or me as individuals.

Think about how many people you know that feel that life is somehow unfair and that it does not have their best interests in mind - well as things currently stand, they are right! This observation is clearly reflected in the functioning of all societies worldwide, whereby the lives of individual humans and animals are happily sacrificed for the greater cause of humanity. And as much as this approach creates a false sense of security, we all know that any of us could be targeted just by being in the wrong place at the wrong time...

You could be next!

I find it intriguing that we as a species could ever buy into this notion of selectively justifying sacrifice as being acceptable and justifiable. Let alone the brutality that is used in the process of enforcing it. There is quite obviously a flaw in this mode of thinking if we are to create a world where we genuinely want people to care about each other. How could we ever possibly hope to achieve peace and harmony, when we have empowered ourselves to conveniently decide when life is expendable or not, based on circumstances, desired outcomes, our learning and our beliefs.

Phase 5

The Insanity of Humanity 5

If one is to be totally honest and wants to function from a place of integrity, then calculated destruction is never okay and there is no cause great enough to justify the sacrifice of anything; unless of course the corruption of the human spirit is acceptable to us. But pain has an amazing ability to allow us to see what is convenient rather than absorbing the truth of our behaviour.

Really consider what I am saying here. If we continue to empower ourselves with the ability to place a value on different forms of life, or each other, then how are we ever going to get to a place where we value life on a whole?

For if we cannot as a species create an agreed and accepted mode of functioning that has the underlying property of respect for all of life, then there will always be something that we need badly enough that will justify the sacrifice of something else to get what we want. And as I said, how do you feel when this very process of thinking that you are currently justifying turns on you? Does it still seem fair, reasonable and appropriate, or is it suddenly a moment of injustice because you are now the target?

One could argue that this approach, whereby we justify sacrifice for gain, is necessary for the continuance of progress; however, what sort of world are we going to be happy to live in? Is being alive that precious that we will do anything to hold on to it, even though inevitably it is going to end whether we like it or not - do you get a little hint of insanity in that?

We have become so obsessed with staying alive that we have forgotten how to live...

So given that humanity is quite obviously struggling to work out how to create peaceful and harmonious civilisations, how could it be that we actually think that we are intelligent or wise enough to be able to place a value system on life itself?

How do we value something we do not even understand?

It is our beliefs that are guiding the processes within ourselves, or within our leaders that pick and choose when sacrifice is acceptable.

All beliefs are corruptible because they are fear based mechanisms and they only have survival of the physical being as their primary goal. When using beliefs to guide our lives we are not interested in the entirety of life, but only in the small segments pertaining to our notion of existence. Therefore to use a belief to guide the processes of valuing life and the proceeding choices of sacrifice is fraught with potential corruption. And this is exactly what is happening in the world today. However, this programmed blind selfishness that we must all live with does perfectly serve the processes of what we have defined as evolution.

The interesting part of all this, is the fact that as people continue to empower themselves with decision-making that is actually beyond their existing realm of awareness, they inadvertently keep themselves trapped at a certain level of existence. And this is owing to the confusion that this creates. Meaning, they are playing a game where they don't even really understand the rules. Therefore the outcomes are always totally confusing and the world continues to be seen as a problem. So the rules of life become this elusive thing that we shall never understand. Hence the empowerment of the Problem Solving Mind and the continuance of our incarceration within the Construct...

So it would be reasonable to propose that it is in fact humanity that is unwittingly offering itself as the sacrificial lamb.

To clarify, if we continue to empower ourselves with the ability to place value and controls upon something that we do not understand, then the truth shall never be ours to see. Our illusionary obsession to conquer life will drive us deeper into the black hole of our own existence.

In sacrificing other life forms we are inadvertently sacrificing ourselves...

And this is because the processes of thinking that are required to create the necessary levels of denial to value other entities lives as less than our own, are the same processes that are creating the pathways towards the psychological black hole.

The old saying "you can't have your cake and eat it too", is definitely true. We can't justify cruelty and think we can get away with it, just because the majority of people in our chosen place of residence condone it and join in on our behaviour. We may be able to avoid external judgement, but we will be punished in other ways I assure you.

Every time we find a way to conveniently accept the unacceptable, the strength and nature of the enforcement in our mental prison is increasing.

See these pathways of denial and justifications as control. Control that we think is necessary because we continue to see life as a problem that needs solving. And the completely ridiculous part of all this is that life does not need to be conquered. Humanity is trying to solve something that does not want to be solved and that can only lead to increased levels of disharmony and pain.

Life is what it is and it is this time for us to learn to flow with it, but first we must learn to understand it. And we will never understand it if we don't open our eyes beyond our selfish needs to feel good.

To this point in time, we thought we were gaining personal and global power by controlling, analysing and experimenting on life. But we have made one fatal mistake - gaining control has no limits or boundaries. It is an insatiable desire, because control does not actually take fear away; it simply increases it as we become scared of losing the security that we have acquired. Hence by following this pathway we have forced our fears onto life, rather than guiding their journey with integrity and wisdom.

Now we are all paying the price for our lack of patience!

If it was not pain and fear that was driving us we would be much wiser by now, because we would have spent more time sensing the true nature of life as opposed to foolishly trying to control it. So here we are still trying to take pride in our technology and our progress, constantly justifying what we have done to gain this knowledge and desperately needing to tell ourselves how special we are. It is as if humanity is trying to prove itself in some vain attempt to gain recognition for their dominance and superiority over other living things - but who do we want recognition from? And what kind of entity would respect and applaud achievement that has such an ugly trail of blood behind it?

The deep insecurities that drive this process are what allow for the highly immoral behaviour that humanity has allowed itself to reap its falsely identified rewards from. Of course, we are finding out very quickly that the rewards that are coming from control, particularly through this phase of rapid technological advancement, are in fact just an elusive lure that is only offering a false promise of happiness.

We are all behaving like scared little children that desperately want to have their needs satisfied and desperately need to feel secure to be happy. Do not see this as a condemnation of humanity. Open your eyes instead and see that this modern-day phenomenon of advanced levels of physical and psychological destruction is simply exposing the true nature and functioning of the inside of the human mind when guided by pain.

Corruption

As the Problem Solving Mind is gaining greater control over the functioning of humanity, we are witnessing higher levels of corruption. The potentially alarming part of this observation is that for quite a long time leading up to present-day, governments and business have made quite extreme attempts to disguise any type of deceptive or manipulative behaviour. However, it has become apparent very recently that the individuals that represent us in positions of power are blatantly and arrogantly throwing down their masks and confidently exposing the true nature of their fraudulent behaviour.

In examining this modern-day phenomenon, it is very important to observe the way people behave when commonly shared beliefs are under strain. This encourages people to unite when they would normally be living a life of segregation. This allows for extraordinarily high levels of corruption, as individual responsibility is conveniently disguised by a so-called greater cause. This leaves people open to behave in a manner that they may have otherwise been forced to face and therefore see the unacceptability of. So as the individual is hiding from facing the truth of their own behaviour, it not only becomes more corruptible but also easier to control, as their levels of fear are higher and therefore the need to be guided towards security increases.

At times of global uncertainty, security becomes the primary focus and therefore what we will accept to achieve this starts stretching the boundaries of anyone's definition of integrity.

So hopefully you are starting to get some sense that corruption is a malleable reality which shifts and changes to suit the purposes of satisfying human need, via the pathways of the Problem Solving Mind. If you want to get a clearer idea of what I'm talking about, then have a look through the history of the human species within one particular culture, preferably your own. Then take note of how what is considered to be tolerable behaviour changes depending on the era.

Note that different eras simply represent differently programmed Constructs, but don't be fooled by this, for Constructs create many faces to disguise their systematic and predictable behind-the-scenes processes of functioning.

To illustrate this point lets take a look at another time in the history of human evolution.

She is a witch!

Let's journey to Salem, Massachusetts in the spring of 1692.

You've just been accused of being a witch. The reason for the accusation against you might have arisen from a long list of possibilities.

Perhaps you talk to yourself, you're reclusive, or exhibit some other form of eccentric behavior...

Sound familiar?

Perhaps you don't go to church, or go to the wrong church. Perhaps you speak French! Or perhaps you expressed support for a recently accused witch, or worse yet, accused the accusers of lying. Whatever the reason, your situation is not looking promising.

So what are your options?

- Confess to avoid death and let God deal with you.
- Get pregnant and face trial once the baby is born.
- Plead innocent and stand for trial – not a good option!
- Refuse to stand for trial - but be mindful that one man who refused to plead to the charges was pressed to death with rocks.

Whatever option you choose it isn't looking good for you. Why? Because the Construct of that moment, like all Constructs, were created from fear. Fear of what is not understood and is therefore controlled.

It was a Construct of thinking that led to the process of irrational behavior that allowed for the justification of the destruction of innocent people's lives in Salem in 1692.

So do you think that the activities and things that we accept today are not also full of such obscene justifications? I assure you they are. And it is only when we are housed in the Construct that we will not allow ourselves to see the truth as to the consequences of our own behaviour, or of that in society as a whole. We have only rearranged the bits and pieces of the puzzle to create the same scenario in a different disguise.

If we were all to take an honest look at the very systems that we are partaking in and contributing to, buy the very nature of accepting them, then I assure you, if integrity was our guide, we would have to change many aspects of our lives quite dramatically.

Would you be prepared to do that? Well, some of you might say yes, but I assure you, that our Problem Solving Mind's would not allow the majority of us to do so, for this would be contravene to its intent of maintaining control.

Fear has led us into a state of functioning where we believe that being in control is more important than living with integrity.

Can you sit comfortably with yourself and say that this is okay?

Whatever your answer is, if we do not face the truth of what I am presenting then our lives will continue to be one of dissatisfaction and confusion, as we unite on a pathway of denial towards our demise. And this is why it is so important to explore, not only our individual behaviour, but also the global reality that is dramatically influencing our behaviour without us even realising it.

We are uniting in a constant process of shared information and that information is becoming embodied with increasing levels of pain and fear...

Given that we know that fear corrupts behaviour, it is not hard to imagine where this is heading us. The more we feel fear the more we share fear. The more we share it, the more we feel the need to control life to protect ourselves. The more we control life in general, the more we become individually controlled and therefore our levels of fear and pain increase and so on it goes. And embodied in this process is also the exponential growth of the justification for corruption and cruelty, as fear makes us blind to caring about things outside of our own survival.

Also please note that as this fear is spreading rampantly across the planet from one individual to another, it is taking all of us further and further away from the truth as to where our freedom lies. For our freedom will never be found from continually protecting ourselves against our perceived enemy. It will only be found when we wake up to the reality that we are living inside the Construct, an interactive cyber reality that has consumed the human species. Once again, let me reiterate that this is the Insanity of Humanity...

Humanity is destroying life to maintain life for the fear of facing life!

Is it just me, or was I born with funny coloured glasses, because that does adequately describe what we do and it would be hard to argue that that is not downright crazy! Yet on we go from generation to generation functioning down the same pathway, in fact, worse than that, we are actually building and reinforcing the very machinery that creates it.

Of course denial of what I am presenting has been conveniently argued and debated for many centuries, because one group of united Constructs think they know better than another group. Therefore it is the “others” that are messing everything up - hence the justification of corruption, violence and sacrifice to resolve clashes in beliefs. And this will go on forever because none of them are the truth and therefore it doesn't matter who wins and takes control, humanity will always be guided towards the same place; a dark and ugly misguided world.

So even though it may look like our eternal thinking and analysis of life is leading us towards being in control of our environment and of other people whose beliefs are in conflict with our own, the truth is far removed from how we conveniently perceive it.

We are going to destroy life all around us in order to protect us, because our beliefs told us that this is what we should do. Do you think that one day humanity will look back and see us as foolish, primitive, cruel and selfish? Because we were able to conveniently justify the sacrifice of other living things to get what we wanted, to get control.

Well I hope the answer to this question is yes.

Because if it is yes, it means that we figured this entire dilemma out and united on a pathway of sharing wisdom, instead of partaking in the divisiveness that misunderstood pain continues to create.

I cannot underestimate how important it is for all of us to see the larger more lateral picture before you can truly move on to finding individual freedom. Interestingly, once one finds this personal freedom, life no longer feels like you are an individual in an isolated sense, but rather part of a united process of life.

Trading integrity for control

Without integrity, what are we?

Without integrity nobody can trust anybody and that leaves us living in a world where we will continually be trapped in the game of deceit and manipulation, the game of the Construct - a game where we will continue to justify and accept the most obscene realities in order to protect our fears and maintain our control.

Can you see that this technique is simply not working?

The more we individually go down this pathway we are creating a uniting of minds all trapped in the same mode of functioning - Creating a world that we are finding difficult to live in.

We are doing this to ourselves!

Even if you were to be the only person on the planet that woke up to the truth, to break free from the insanity and started to live a life with genuine awareness and integrity, then do it, because at least you will be able to die with dignity. You will be able to die alive!

If we were to actually shine the light of truth on all of us, then we would all have to be thrown in jail.

“How ridiculous” I hear in the background, well surprise, surprise...

Because inadvertently that is exactly what has happened to all of us, we are all in a place of incarceration - maybe this is universal karma and planet Earth has been reserved for us less than honest ones!

Or maybe life on earth is simply the testing ground where only those with deep integrity can pull out of the corruption and therefore earn the right to continue the journey of life into eternity.

Remember that to feel incarcerated is in fact just that, a feeling, a feeling that is derived from a certain type of thinking. It is our current mode of thinking, whereby we are connected to our belief structures, that is creating the forever decreasing parameters of our existence. This is because our beliefs as to what we should fear are increasing. Therefore the networks of our interconnected cage are becoming thicker and harder to see through...

And I assure you that the truth lies outside of them.

Now as this process makes our personal world feel smaller the dynamics of control are getting bigger, which therefore once again leads to higher levels of corruption, which therefore means that the system and laws of functioning that guide us contain less morality and integrity as time goes on.

This is the perfect scenario for governments to take control of the individual - for if the individual feels overwhelmed most of the time, then the last thing they are going to put their energy into is questioning their own behaviour within the parameters of the law - whether it is founded with integrity or not...

Perfect! Give the creator of that one a gold star for excellence in manipulation.

The human mind is built to be affected by learning more than any other creature on this planet and therefore it also has far less innate programs than any other creature. This gave our minds more flexibility in terms of the possibilities of how we could function and adapt to different environments. It was a great survival mechanism for creative problem-solving, but now without question it is working against us. This is because it also leaves us extremely open to being manipulated and controlled, to the point where we are unaware of the consequences of our own behaviour. This collective manipulation of our minds on a global scale is creating such divisiveness, that it is getting to the point that no one really has a clue what they're doing any more...

Humanity is fighting humanity, so therefore no matter who wins we all lose!

As long as we live in the world of beliefs then we will always think that it is other humans that we must protect ourselves against. And once again this process of thinking perfectly services the functioning of the Construct, as we battle against our falsely identified enemy which is in fact just us fighting us.

We may as well just go into a room and individually beat ourselves up, as that would encompass the same level of sanity as the processes that we are currently consumed by.

Well I have some bad news for you, because we are also already doing this also.

Tell me one person that you know who does not question themselves and beat themselves up intellectually and emotionally over the wrongs and rights of the choices they have made in their past? Of course, this is just an eternal and never-ending battle with no right answer, so we jump right back onto the boat of blaming others!

Before we will ever get the chance to experience a more highly developed process of functioning, we must first understand the ramifications of what pain is causing in today's world. Otherwise we will never make the necessary moves to change our pathway. Currently we have become totally addicted to and reliant upon the systems that pain has created. These systems are therefore immobilising our ability to let go of our fear, even though it is our systems of functioning that are forcing the sensation of fear to levels that are crippling all of humanity. This will only serve to create a life whereby we will be continually swapping between the processes of control and compromise, a pathway that leads to nothing but futile and primitive power struggles with other people.

Pain collection machines

Global amassing of pain

Pain and the fear that it creates can spread from one individual to another very rapidly and with the advent of today's technology this process has been greatly accelerated to create a global phenomenon.

There are many aspects to the global amassing of pain that are worth considering. This will help create an understanding of your own functioning and whether you want to continue to contribute to this process. To cover them all would require a book devoted to this topic, as it is a big one with very complex interwoven realities attached to it. So for now let's just have a look at some of the key issues that will help you create the necessary foundation for the development of your awareness.

Firstly, within your lifetime, whatever age you are, you have probably grown up in a system which functions through a process of control, which uses fear to achieve its objectives. Ask yourself a simple question to explore what I am saying; how does the functioning of the system you live in determine the nature of how you are able to express your existence; with respect and intelligent wisdom, or with the threat of reprisal?

Despite the sometimes rather soft and fluffy disguises that it hides behind, the message of threat and reprisal is the norm. So whether you like it or not, or whether you are even aware of it, more than likely you are living in a permanent state of repression, which is therefore, even if extremely subtle, a permanent state of fear. The pain based energy in this kind of environment spreads from one individual to another and it will also infect anyone that enters this arena. It literally creates a mass entity of fear and pain that is comprised of the accumulation of the individuals within it – this is the Super Construct!

It is the processes of control that keep this mass entity together as a united force of pain. Every single aspect of the systems and structures in which you are currently living has been built through the processes of your Problem Solving Mind and guided by pain and the fear that it manifests.

Therefore our societies are the physical representation of the functioning of the Problem Solving Mind. Just to explain this a little further; remember that the mind is confused how to clearly get in touch with the world that it experiences and therefore the closest thing that it can create to a physical structure within its mind is a belief. So then it tries to bring this belief to life by using the human body to create external structures and systems of functioning that match its internal world of beliefs.

Also, it is worth paying further attention to the fact that all of the leaders of the systems that the Problem Solving Mind has created are also just a representative of its functioning. They are a representative of the accumulated thinking and pain based energy that we all share.

So whether you like what you see or not, the leaders that emerge are those of us whose personality structures, learning and brain functioning most closely fit into the systems that we have all created. So it would be fair to propose, as we have travelled a long way down the path of creating a world that represents the Problem Solving Mind, that these individuals would need to be almost completely attuned to the functioning of the Construct for them to be able to maintain their position of control.

So don't waste your time getting angry at the leaders that you see guiding the destiny of humanity, because they are only the representatives of what we have all created.

So if you think it is time for a different kind of leader, then it is time to create different systems of life for us to express ourselves within. And we can only do this by changing the functioning of each and every individual person, until the majority learn to function beyond the parameters of the Construct.

Don't underestimate what I am proposing here, as we are all more deeply entrenched in our psychological cages than we realise.

Fear corrupts and creates irrational behaviour; you can see that within anybody...

But what we don't realise, is that we are all permanently living in and being guided by, at the very least, subtle levels of the energy that embodies fear. Therefore humanity just continues to forge forward in this direction of corruption and control, as if this pathway could somehow ever lead to a place of peace and harmony. It is as if we keep thinking that the answers and solutions that we are looking for are always just around the next corner...An illusionary corner that is just a false notion in our minds which we never actually arrive at.

It is not hard to imagine, once you embrace the awareness of what I am presenting, how pain just grows and accumulates an overwhelming amount of power over the group and over the individuals within it. Then as the system controls the group, the individuals within it create their own little groups. They do this in an attempt to get their own version of power as they try to take back what has been taken away from them and so it goes on...

If there is any element of control attached to your life, then something is being taken away from you, otherwise there would be no need for control.

Nobody feels good being controlled and consequently, having to give up part of the functioning of their mental structure. This simply fuels the pathways of pain and this pain must be channelled back into something. Some people may try and control their employees, some may try and control their partners and others may channel their fear and pain by controlling their pets, the weak or the disadvantaged.

The only reason we attempt to control other things is to make our own life feel like it is under control.

Sometimes people disguise their pain and need to control within "good" causes. Not ever recognising that channelling pain down any pathway, other than for the purpose of gathering wisdom, is buying into the never ending loop of insanity. Whatever the scenario, I am painting a picture to help you see that fear and pain just keeps transferring from one living thing to another. If you want it to stop, then you must first become aware that it is happening in the first place. And become aware of your part in this game.

We only feel psychological pain when we perceive something to have been taken away from us and this is how we justify our processes of using control to get something back...

But for us to get something back means that we to have to take something away from someone or something and so on this insane process will continue.

This energy space that we are all living in, which is the energy that unites all Constructs, affects every piece of information we receive, communicate and share with each other. It therefore has a massive effect on the belief structures we create about ourselves and the world which we live in. Hence this affects the process of how our mind filters information that is presented to us, which unintentionally on our part, affects our behaviour.

So even though it is not you directly that is creating the mayhem, you do have the power and ability to change these processes of functioning.

It would appear that the larger proportion of the human population does not know the truth behind what is guiding their behaviour. It is therefore not surprising that we are observing increasing levels of fear, increasing levels of psychological disturbance, increasing levels of destructive behaviour and therefore increasing levels of control to maintain and guide this fear by the very systems that are supposedly there to protect us. The only reason that governments are able to convincingly sell to us that control is in our interest is because we have already bought in to the belief that this is true.

So even though we are all feeling the repression of being controlled, somehow we think that the benefits outweigh the costs because our lives will be safer.

Given that this is an ongoing cycle that grows exponentially, try and imagine where this is heading us. As the controls in society increase, the parameters of our freedom to move and make choices within our incarceration decrease.

We are being moved slowly but surely down a pathway from one level of a high security prison to the next, where our privileges decrease and the rules controlling our behaviour increase.

How could we possibly see this as being in our best interest?

This is the world we are creating. This will continue until we are all effectively living in a tiny and tight little world - remember that life for you is occurring on the inside of your mind, so if your minds parameters get smaller and smaller, the sensation of your life will also get proportionately smaller.

So here we are being sold control for the sake of protecting us, and for the sake of protecting our freedom and rights as an individual, yet it is our freedom of expression and our rights that are being taken away from us.

The global amassing of pain and fear has led us to trade our freedom for a falsely identified security...

So why would we do this to ourselves?

Because we are feeling so psychologically weak and insecure; therefore we feel more in control within the notion of security.

We have not within our society developed the ability and skills to learn how to utilise our freedom effectively, therefore even though we desperately want freedom, in many ways it is an unknown realm that we are scared of. When the levels of fear in society get great enough, it can get to the point where we filter out all information other than that which is pertaining to pain and this is the stage that we are getting too now. This obviously leaves us in such a vulnerable state that the offer of control and security seems like a gift from the heavens. However, I assure you that the face behind the giver of such illusionary good fortune is very different from the one that we are being presented with. Don't be fooled by the smile behind the offer of security, for you are being lured into the black hole of your mind!

People are in so much fear that they get stuck in a permanent state of alertness to danger and their mind will do this for the purpose of trying to protect them from the pain. Unfortunately this will leave them experiencing nothing but pain and a more desperate and insecure need for happiness. And if this is how you feel a lot of the time, then this is who you will think you are. And that will be a person that is not easy to like, or be comfortable with - whether by you or by other people.

The end result is that we just keep empowering the need for the justifications of our social masks, which continue to lead to the very systems which we complain about and the very behaviour that we despise. Yet our Problem Solving Minds would never allow us to believe that we are the problem, hence our attention permanently gets diverted to everything that is perceived to be outside of us.

The end result of this is that we have many billions of people on the planet collectively thinking that life's problems lie somewhere outside of their own mind, hence why the Collective Construct can continue its reign of control over the human race.

It's a strange thought isn't it? To think that individually we are all going to suffer as a consequence of the systems that we are building and yet somehow they continue to be developed. And this is why I am trying to help people see that there is something driving humanity that goes far beyond our current state of awareness. So for this to change, we must all collectively start focusing our attention onto the reality, that we are actually trapped within self created illusionary parameters inside of our minds.

Otherwise the systems of control will continue and our lives will proceed to feel progressively less significant until we will end up as faceless creatures trapped inside our own technology.

So, to clarify, the more pain we feel the worse we behave, then the worse we behave the more justifications governments have to increase their levels of control over us. This leads to more fear and repression of individual expression, which makes us feel more vulnerable and out of control. We therefore become more open to the possibilities of corruption in our own behaviour, which inadvertently leaves us open to being taken advantage of by others. This is because our needs have become corrupted with fear and therefore are not representing the true essence of who we are - hence leading us down an insatiable and elusive pathway. Therefore this leaves us all stuck in a state of deep insecurity while attempting to put forward a social mask of confidence.

We put so much effort into trying to present ourselves in a manner that will protect our deep insecurity, that our ability to clearly and adequately interpret all that we interact with is diminished. And this is quite simply leaves us wide open and vulnerable to being controlled, taken advantage of and lured down pathways that have the promise of happiness.

But don't jump onto the victim platform to quickly, expounding your disgust that this could possibly be happening to you, as we are all partaking in the same process and therefore we are all responsible for what we are experiencing.

We will continue to play the role of victim in all of its many justifiable disguises, until we realise that we are all living in a purpose built cyber program of functioning.

The Construct requires us to unite to create a system that could function in such a manner. So if you do not like the picture that I have painted, then start by individually removing yourself from the processes of pain that you have become so deeply reliant upon. And as hard as this is to do, the starting point is to simply shine the light of awareness on this reality.

This certainly points to one of the interesting characteristics of living in the Construct – it is able to create such masterful illusions within its interactive game of deception that we do not even know that we are within it. We therefore think that this mode of functioning is normal and therefore this allows for the uniting of individual Constructs. This inevitably creates the overall systems of functioning that are controlling us, yet these systems could not exist without all of us individually feeding this cyber realm.

Because we are all trapped in the same place we continue to justify so much of what we know is wrong and that is because we know no other way to function. This leaves us with only one choice and that is to live in denial of the pain and suffering that our footprint is creating on this planet...

Humanities footprint is a visual image of pain.

How could one face their responsibility towards this when they don't really understand how it is all happening in the first place? People don't understand their own mechanisms of functioning and they don't realise that their behaviour is being controlled by forces beyond their existing level of awareness. Humanity really has found itself in a real spot of bother and things will soon feel like they are spiralling out of control if people don't start stirring up their deeper levels of Conscious Awareness that is lying dormant within them.

Good Vs Evil

If you really want to open your mind up to the possibilities of the truth behind the systems of functioning which you are trapped in, then try to see the manifestation of everything that you are witnessing as all just one entity. The same system of functioning that is creating the falsely identified "white knights" is the same system that is creating the falsely identified "evil", which these "good guys" are attempting to destroy.

There is no good and there is no evil within the realms that we are currently experiencing, it is all just one thing. Let's explore this concept of good and evil a little further - it is becoming an ever increasing and prominent concept throughout the development and evolution of our global state of insanity.

The potentially destructive pathways that pain can manifest through the processes of the human mind, is what's creating the desperate behaviour that is occurring worldwide in the form of this falsely identified battle between good and evil. These conflicts are stimulated by the abrasive effects that are created when countries, or organised groups of people, enforce their belief structures into a realm of functioning where totally different belief structures exist. The ridiculous aspect to this process is that each side thinks that they are good and that the other is evil. Take note any time you watch the news in future, just how often our world leaders talk about the evil that they must control and destroy, as if somehow they are functioning from a place of purity and integrity. And they only say this because they think that this is what we want to hear.

If we keep fighting each other behind the disguise of accumulated belief structures, we will never truly face the responsibility of the pain which we feel and the corruption in our own behaviour. We will therefore continue down a path of blaming and destroying. If you want to be free of this cycle of destruction, then it is important for you to stop and look at yourself as an individual as honestly as you can. Then you can begin the journey of developing awareness with integrity. For if we do not take stock of the pain that we experience as an individual, we will proceed to create a collective human pathway that will lead to the extermination of our civilisations.

So if you are able to individually free yourself from the pathways of pain, then it will be very easy for you to step back and see what I am presenting to you right now. I know that this is the last thing that any person wants to hear, because they have fully bought into the notion that the only way we will ever find peace and security in the future, is if we destroy the evil that is taking our freedom away.

However, there is no evil taking your freedom away in the manner in which we are currently perceiving it.

The Construct and the Problem Solving Mind is controlling and manufacturing all individual human behaviour, therefore it is also creating the supposed evil and the supposed good – and this is part of The Game. So they are all just cyber realities that perfectly serve the purpose of the evolution.

We are all creating this evil that we are fighting against.

This illusion, that control is a technique that is working, has been enhanced because governments worldwide have united on the pathway to destroy the evil that they have identified. The group mentality has gone to a new extreme! The more we increase the levels of controls against an opposing force, the more the parameters of the things that we are supposedly fighting against grow in intensity. Until one day these parameters become too great to handle and the psychological consequences on an individual basis will be felt by everyone. The leaders of the various countries can only keep justifying their pathways of destruction to gain control, because you and everyone you know are letting them do it.

The people have the numbers and without the people governments have no power whatsoever...

If we are united in insanity then our world will be a representative of insanity, and if we are united in wisdom then our world will be a representative of wisdom.

These processes of control create a never ending and futile pathway which has been tried endlessly throughout the history of humanity. However, they are still very tempting because they offer a quick fix solution to appease the Problem Solving Minds insatiable need for security.

It is time for humanity to pull together and realise that we are all trapped in the Construct and we can all unite in our awareness of this, therefore leading us to the realisation that no one is to blame specifically.

Together we can free ourselves from this psychological place of incarceration.

Remember that the only way we can get control is ultimately through a process of physical intimidation, which means the threat of pain or death. Any acts of violence or control towards one individual from another, or from one country to another, can only be sourced by great pain. And it is that pain that we must learn to understand, because the fear that it creates is corrupting and distorting our ability to make wise decisions.

If you feel determined to look for “evil” then start by looking for it within your own mind and within your own culture, because you are creating the Construct which is making your life feel so tight and fearful. We are all allowing our governments to lure us down a pathway where security is the answer to everything.

You may not individually be able to stand up against the whole system, but you can individually free yourself from the incarceration within your own mind. And this can only happen when you stop believing that your Problem Solving Mind is you.

When you get to this point you will stop believing in what the system is telling you and you will start finding the truth through a process of integrity and wisdom. So at the very least you will enjoy the freedom and sense of purity that comes from functioning beyond your fear based beliefs. And then you can avoid as much of the repression that society is putting upon you as you possibly can.

Humanity will need to stop using external power as means to an end...

or an end is all we will have.

The Information Super Highway

Information certainly is power, but the question to be asking ourselves is...

Power to do what and by whom?

Human beings are information transference machines. We are constantly receiving, editing and spreading information from mind to mind. Technology is speeding this process up to a swiftness that can allow for rapid social reprogramming.

Let's travel back in time for a moment to compare this to our more primitive ancestors.

There was a time when we did not have any sophisticated form of language at all and therefore to even communicate from one person to another would have been somewhat difficult - let alone communicating to a whole group. This information that was shared would have rarely made it outside of the group and hence progressive change was slow, as learning was slow. Since these primitive times, the need to survive forced the need to improve the pathways of communication from one person to another and from one location to another.

This process has greatly accelerated in the last century, which has led to the creation of the Information Super Highway.

With the advent of digital technology and its application to various modes of communication such as mobile phones and the World Wide Web, we now have access to information at our fingertips. So yes, information certainly creates power, but it has up until quite recently, primarily been used to enhance the processes of manipulation and control.

However, the latest technological advances have also had a somewhat unexpected outcome. People are being linked and united in a way that they never have before. These individuals are therefore having a great impact on the direction of how we think and on the future of business.

So business more than ever is trying to go with the flow of human thinking, as they have to relinquish an element of their previous techniques of control in order to create a pathway leading to financial success. The danger in this of course is that the people guiding the journey have no one to guide them - hence the importance of creating pathways of communication and information that give them the necessary awareness, knowledge and skills to be able to utilise this new world effectively.

We are currently experiencing what I would propose is a unique window of opportunity. Open expression of the deep confusion of our pain and desires is rampant and available to everyone. Either this opportunity can be harnessed to redirect this energy towards a greater place of wisdom, or the systems that currently control our existence will find a way to control today's technology - Which inevitably means they will be controlling the transfer of information, which increases the ability to control us.

Where we stand at present, fear and pain has become a very valuable commodity and therefore it is spreading through this Information Super Highway at a rate that far exceeds our ability to decipher and comprehend it.

Most of what we learn today is via these various forms of technology. We have created a situation where a huge proportion of what lives inside our minds, is gathered from information that we have not even personally experienced.

Think about the ramifications of that for a moment.

Information is being diluted further and further away from the truth, which therefore makes it easier to control its transfer from mind to mind. This therefore simply empowers the control the Problem Solving Mind has over us, which enables it to reinforce the structures of the Construct.

We are already living in a cyber reality, but now we are creating a cyber version of cyber information!

This could be one of the key reasons behind why psychological pain is becoming so great in today's world, as the ability for Conscious Awareness to attach to the purity of life is becoming further and further removed from its grasp.

The most pure information that we can ever receive is when we are in the midst of nature without any manmade creations to influence our minds. Yet this is what we are moving the furthest away from. We are digging deeper into our technological concrete jungles, which are now all linked together via the cyber networks of the Information Super Highway.

In the process of this, even though we are living in the highest levels of population density that has ever existed on this planet, technology is making our lives more and more isolated from genuine interaction with life and other human beings. The way that we communicate with each other is becoming less personal and therefore making it easier for us to avoid exposing any of our insecurities. Just look at all these new cyber virtual reality worlds that are appearing, where people can develop careers, make money and meet friends, while never leaving the safe confines of their room.

There is however an interesting aspect of this that may eventually work in our favour if we wake up to what is going on. As we are retreating and hiding from face-to-face personal communication, the need for our social cyber guardians is decreasing and therefore it will be easier to expose and see the true nature and functioning of the Problem Solving Mind.

So if we smarten up very quickly, there are many aspects to what is happening in the world today that we could quickly turn around and have work in our favour. However, we don't seem to be fully awake yet as this is not happening. So currently in our attempts to appease most of our fears and concerns about life, we are relying on the fact that the information which has been presented to us is founded with truth and integrity - and it is not.

We are being manipulated so quickly and cleverly, that if the Problem Solving Mind was a person, he or she would be gloating with a smile from ear to ear, as humanity is feeding perfectly into the hands of this super fast transference of distorted information. The further removed we get from the truth, the more our interpretation of life resembles a notion of pain.

Technology has become pains super fast portal entry into the human mind for this virus to take over our lives.

This super highway of technological information sharing is keeping us united in fear, as fear is the ultimate commodity for the purpose of controlling individuals. And this is whether it is from a government perspective or from the perspective of the big corporations, who have nothing but profit as their ultimate objective. As people are uniting with their pain and the fear that this creates, they are also uniting in their attempts to run away from it as they insatiably seek a solution.

Waiting at the GoBus stop

The link between government and business is such that together they are the creator of our fears and the provider of the solutions to them...

Does anyone get a hint of the potential for corruption in that?

Also, governments sell and enforce honesty and integrity, yet the individuals within it display little of these characteristics. They also justify all of their behaviour with some greater cause; hence personal responsibility has vanished in some intangible world that we have lost connection to. And on top of all this we are asked to respect and submit to our leaders without questioning their authority! Quite extraordinary when you really stop and think about it. Yet this is the very system of functioning that the majority of people on this planet are partaking in and contributing to everyday of their lives.

What a masterfully created little system we are experiencing...

Governments feed us with fear, offer to protect us and then control us if we don't do what we are told - quite sick really!

Then in steps the world of business, creating the money that fuels the government machinery... There is certainly no Robin Hood in this story, as the business world does nothing but take advantage of the fear that governments create. The fear that they are either knowingly or inadvertently actually paying the government to create, by supporting these very structures and systems of functioning. One can not live without the other in this twisted and distorted relationship that they have with each other.

I call this inseparable government and business entity GoBus.

So here we are united in our fear, yet desperate to feel good. Now we are presented with the ultimate solution, which is in fact the devil in disguise.

Technology combined with business acumen, channelled down the Information Super Highway, which is controlled by governments, is the perfect vehicle for offering the endless lure of happiness, to keep us chasing something that in reality can never be found on this pathway to escape our pain.

So the system that is continually offering us the false lure of happiness is the same entity that is causing the suffering in the first place. So it doesn't matter what position or role that we have within this structure, we are ultimately all working for the same team...

The human species are all employees of the Construct.

So within this extraordinary structure, where every individual element tends to function as if it is independent from the other, people are, because of their lack of awareness as to what is going on, continuing to feed the pathways that are literally building a super system of control.

Within this system, technology is being used as the ecstasy tablet for adults and youth alike, in an attempt to dull our pain just for long enough to distract us. Meanwhile our fear is being controlled down manipulated pathways. Of course the symbolic ecstasy tablet does not take our pain away; it just gives us momentary relief and then afterwards leaves us with increased levels of disabling disturbance. Through the clever pathways of business indoctrination we are corralled into a permanent place of wanting more. So we are trying to get on with our life while at the same time feeling stagnant and stationery, as if waiting at the bus stop for the next trip to something good.

Sure enough, the next scheduled GoBus, which symbolises the next alluring and cleverly presented product on the market, comes and picks us up and takes us down another illusionary journey towards everlasting happiness. And although we had momentary relief from our pain, it quickly becomes apparent that it has increased in its intensity when we get dropped off at the next stop.

Now the pain driven wanting increases in its concentration, as it also increases the parameters of the thing that is required to satisfy this craving monster that lives within our minds. This also leads to us behaving in a more erratic manner, which is dealt with by the government increasing their levels of control. Now that we feel more fear, in comes business, like a white knight, to once again solve the problem. Offering another product that has that one extra feature that just might be the very thing that we need to be happy!

Let me assure you that business today intensely examines the nature of human thinking via the communication networks that people are using to unite themselves. It is our youth that will have the greatest impact on our future. And it is our youth that have become addicted to the concept of exposing themselves to the world, in some desperate attempt to find recognition, personal fame, acknowledgement, love and friendship.

Think of the process that I have just described. Now have a look at the rate that new products and services are being created, with all of them offering something bigger and better than before. This is because they know what our needs, wants and insecurities are more than ever before. This process is directly correlated to the increasing amount of pain and fear that we are feeling.

It is important to ask yourself if you any happier for all that you are being offered. If not, then you are being deceived, manipulated and lied to by the very system which controls you and asks for your trust and financial support. And effectively we are creating the very thing that will eventually destroy us, because it is us exposing our fears, wants and desires. And this open exposure is being analysed and manipulated behind the scenes at a level that most people would be totally unaware of.

Most people are aware of the underlying discomfort of their existence, but in general they are unaware of the mechanisms that are creating it - particularly in regard to the external systems of their life and the internal mechanisms of their mind that are interpreting and utilising this information.

We have become hopelessly reliant upon the very system that is destroying us and ironically, we created it!

However you want to look at it, if you want to find a genuine state of strength, wisdom, and happiness in your life, then it is up to you to take charge and make informed and intelligent decisions as to the systems to which you allow yourself to be affected by.

My advice is to stay away from messages that focus on the outcome of fear and blame while offering no solution or guidance attached to this information. Also stay away from any information which feeds your insatiable appetite for quick fix pleasure, whatever the source. Although these may appear to be two totally different forms of information with very different messages, they are in fact one in the same. This is because they are all driven through the processes of the Construct and one cannot live without the other. They are two of the necessary parameters to keep us trapped and undeniably lost within the world of the interactive game in our minds.

This will probably sound extreme to a lot of people, that is, to avoid such information....

Try for one month to disconnect from the Internet, never watch the news and stop reading the newspapers!

At least until you can honestly say that you are not functioning from and identifying with your Problem Solving Mind - until you have the ability to see the truth behind the drama, rather than buying into the fear that it creates. And until you can see the truth behind the lures of false happiness.

I assure you that the media, big business and governments are the “devil” in disguise and their ultimate purpose is to maintain control through the processes of fear and manipulation. And this is occurring even though they may individually separate themselves from each other to maintain a place of innocence. But as one cannot live without the other, this is just a convenient justification and an inexcusable process of denial. Within these structures and organisations, the individuals that are making the decisions and enforcing these pathways, do not see the true depth behind the systems that they are creating.

So if you are waiting at the GoBus stop, I suggest that you leave very quickly, as the last stop for this bus is a penal colony that you may never work out how to leave.

If we all just stopped and said no, then the insanity could not continue. Otherwise these processes of functioning will march forward until there will be no alternative to live outside of the Construct, as the Construct will become humanities permanent place of residence.
